The title of this year's 52nd Surveyor's Day highlights the fact that quality spatial data and spatial information are key to understanding and managing space. Spatial data are those data about objects and phenomena on Earth that include a location component. Location, defined in terms of coordinates and other geographical features of space, is the basis of spatial information.

Surveyor's Day and its formal assembly also present you with an opportunity to present yourselves as exhibitors, sponsors, or donors in support of our efforts to make the meeting a high-quality and successful one.
